Lisbon

Lisbon is a fascinating city of old-fashioned and funky art, architecture and traditions. Its one of Europe's most enjoyable capitals with its relaxed atmosphere, cultural diversity, reasonable prices and charming architecture. Lisbon is set on seven low hills next to the Tejo (Tagus) river. The city's atmosphere is rich with wonderful old buildings, Europe's longest suspension bridge, and fascinating museums and monuments. Despite the city's muscle-aching hills, Lisbon is compact enough to explore on foot. If your legs get tired, Lisbon has very convenient, bus, tram and subway lines as well as funiculars to take you up the steeper hills.

The capital of Portugal is currently in the middle of a building boom which began after it was chosen as the host city for Expo 98. Metro lines have been extended, mosaic sidewalks have been re-paved and 18th century facades have been restored. One of the most urgent works is the saving and restoration of the "Alfama", the old town.

The city moves to pulsing new rhythms, as African music clubs are all the rage. Contrasting to this modern diversity, Portuguese fado songs continue to be heard, the soulful music (which originated here) is still hitting notes of passionate melancholy.

A good way to orient yourself and enjoy a panoramic view is to climb one of the seven hills – Penha de França, Senhora do Monte, Graça, São Jorge, São Pedro Alcantara, Santa Catarina, Estrela. São Jorge is topped by a famous castle, Castelo de São Jorge, and has the most spectacular picturesque view – as the sun sets over the Tagus river. Generally speaking, you can spend an unlimited time discovering and re-discovering this charming city, however if you are on a tight schedule, don't miss exploring the Alfama District, Bairro Alto, and Belem (see under sights for more information). Lisbon is really a wonderful place to explore, anytime of the year. If you are lucky, the sky is blue and the sun is shining even in February and November.

Lisbon – Day Trips

all

South of the river

This could possibly be done in a shorter time with planning – but it is best not rushing and some of the transport links may involve delay.

First take the longest ferry route across the river to Montijo. The trip is good but there's not a lot to see here so get a bus as soon as possible to Setubal. From here you can get a bus for a very pleasant ride to Sesimbra. You may well want to spend a bit of time here and it is good to take a local bus out to the fishing port and back. [If you are British, you may well wonder at the apparent prosperity of the industry here.]

Then take yet another bus to Cacilhas and return to the north bank by the short river crossing.

[If you only have time for one day out from Lisbon, you should go to Sintra but this is good if you have another day.]

Sintra – A day trip for a breath of fresh air

Sintra, about 30 km west of Lisbon, is a refreshing place to go for a day trip, especially to relax and renew after the demands of a big city. Its a place to visit for its mountain–top views toward the coast, the Parque Natural de Sintra–Cascais, the funky palace, tranquil convents, and lush gardens.

Lisbon – Shopping

Lisbon is also a city for shopping, where you can choose between traditional shops and modern shopping malls. The best parts for shopping is the pedestrians area between Praça do Comércio and Largo S. Domingos. Here you'll find lots of fashionable shops with all the great international brands. If you really want to spend a lot of money, go shopping on the Avenida da Liberdade. The best tourist shops are around the Castello S. Jorge, if you want to buy some local specialties, you'd better go to Bairro Alto and avoid the touristical highlights.

If you prefer big shopping malls, and shop at very reasonable prices, you shouldn't miss Colombo, one of the biggest malls in Europe. It can be reached easily through underground, just take the Blue Line and leave on Colégio Militar station.

Napoleao – Port store

Wine and Port store next to the Madalena Church, great selection of wines and port wines (you can also taste). Don't expect lower prices than in other European countries! Inside the shop there is a Roman ruine

Lisbon – Eating Out

It's hard to starve in Lisbon, there are literally hundreds of places you can get something to eat, but you need to figure out what to eat when. The Portuguese often eat a quite extensive lunch in the early afternoon, so they won't get hungry and dine rather late. At lunchtime it is the best to enter one of the small and mostly uncrowded narrow restaurants where the tables are crowded with Portuguese workers. Here you will not have a big choice but always get a proper, cheap and huge warm lunch. To have dinner you have to be patient. If you enter a restaurant before eight, they just know you're a tourist. Portuguese restaurants offer both delicious fish dishes and grilled meat plates, but the vegetables are sometimes cooked to death. Definitely the pastries and sweets are a must: end your meal with a Portuguese espresso bica and one of the delicious deserts. For vegetarians the Portuguese cooking does not offer great variations: try the different vegetable soups and a salad and eat a pastry afterwards. Portuguese do not care so much for breakfast, but take coffee with pastry (for example a fluffy Pão de Deus) around eleven, when most tourists start their day. If you adapt your habits to those of local ones, you will find the Portuguese way of living is not at all that bad.

all

Rei dos Frangos

Cheap – yes. Tasty – yes. Atmospheric – yes. Plentiful – and how!!

Eat outdoors at long tables. The name means Chicken Place and most people seem to eat chicken and chips, although you can have fish, sucking pig or a number of other choices. Order chicken and chips and you get precisely that – a [whole] chicken and chips – so don't order two lots if there are two of you and don't go alone! You will get the requisite number of plates and chips!

Drunks from the nearby cheap bars will be around you but there are the requisite bouncers, too.

To find it stand in the Restauradores Square – next to Rocio – facing towards the Avenida de Libertade, Edward VII Park etc. At the right hand end of the square there is a small ginnel and there it is.

Lisbon – Accommodation

The Avenida da Liberdade is Lisbons Boardwalk (Mayfair for British Monopoly players). This is not just a street with expensive shops, but also with expensive hotels. Just behind it, you will find the Rua da Glória. This is not really a good neighborhood, but the police office is around the corner, so it is not to bad. Here youll find a couple of cheap hotels. Other comfortable small pensions and hotels you will find in the Rua Portas de Santo Antao next to the Rossio and parallel to the Avenida da Liberdade. But whereever you are, in the Chiado district, in the Baixa or in the Bairro Alto, there are always some hidden small pensions and hotels to discover.

Lisbon – Sights

The Alfama District – Lisbons oldest and most historical district, lies below the Castelo de São Jorge. The medieval streets and the incredible views from three of the seven hills of Lisbon – São Jorge, Graça and Senhora do Monte. The neighborhood is a maze of narrow alleyways and steep stairs. It is one of the few neighborhoods that was not totally destroyed by the devastating earthquake of 1755 and retains architectural elements of its Moorish past. The neighborhood is lively by day, but a bit seedy, and not recommended by night. The best way to get there is by taking tram no. 28 from Baixa into Alfama, the tramride is rewarding as it creaks and hisses up and down the hills, east to Alfama. If you take the tram west, youll arrive at Bairro Alto.

The Bairro Alto was an up–scale neighborhood in the 17th century, now it is considered the heart of Lisbons thriving night life. Two funiculars (elevadors) provide transport up the steep hills to the district. If you take the Elevador da Glória, you will find yourself on one of the panoramic hills–the São Pedro de Alcântara, a wonderful place to be, even at night. Go to one of the many fado (Portugal blues) bars in the area–most of them are on Rua do Norte – and sip on a drink. It is worth the hefty cover (usually 2500$00) to experience the music, atmosphere and the drink. Another interesting outing is to check out the African music scene, such as Discoteca A Lontra on Rua de Aso Bento. There is also an excellent Japanese restaurant, serving sushi, in the area.

Belém, about 20 minutes from Lisbons center by tram, was the departure point of most of the world–changing explorations, during the Age of Discoveries. There is a spectacular monastery (where Vasco da Gama is buried) and watch–tower are some of the few Manueline (Portuguese Renaissance & Gothic blend architecture) monuments to have survived the 1755 earthquake, completely undamaged. They have both been designated as UNESCO World Cultural Heritage Sites and are must–sees if you are spending any time in Lisbon. The Tower of Belém, about 10 minutes walk from the monastery, is the symbol of Lisbon and the Age of Discoveries. Avoid Mondays, as everything is closed.

There are other features of interest in the Expo area, the Park of the Nations, including a cable car to Lisbon's tallest building. Apparently this was mainly wasteland prior to the Expo!

Monastery of Jerónimos

Build in the sixteenth century, this monastery close to the river banks has been the burial ground for the royal family for over four centuries. In this monastery dedicated to the Virgin Mary, the monks of the Order of St. Jerome used to pray for the wellbeing of the Portuguese Kings' soul and for the success of the sailors that discovered the world's sea in his name. It is an excellent example of the Manueline style, a typical crossover between late medieval and early renaissance architecture, even though it was severely redecorated in the nineteenth century. Pay attention to the net vaults and the elegant columns of the Santa Maria monastery church. Most famous is the inner cloister, at the moment being renovated. Already declared a National Monument in 1907, it became a Unesco World Cultural Heritage site in 1984.

Belém Tower

As the architecture of the middle ages gradually changed into renaissance architecture, Portugal discovered the New World on the other side of the oceans. The incorporation of elements from the oversea cultures lead to a typical style called: the Manueline style, of which both the Tower of Belém and the Monastery of Jerónimos is a superb example. As a symbol of the King's prestige the towers decoration includes all the Manueline symbols – cables encircling the building and terminating in elegant knots, armillary spheres, crosses of the Military Order of Christ and naturalistic elements such as the rhinoceros, the first such representation in stone known in Europe. The Tower of Belém was build to defend Lisbon and its river entrance. Construction began in 1514 under supervision of Master Builder, Diogo de Boytac, also in charge of the building of the Jerónimos Monastery. This is also a reason for stylistic resemblance between the two buildings. Another mayor reason is the nineteenth century restoration of both buildings.

Metropolitano de Lisboa

Two names are attached to the Lisboan metro network: Keil do Amaral and Maria Keil. Together they made the network not just an efficient way of getting around the town, but also an artistic journey. Keil do Amaral was as architect responsible for the terminal building at Lisbon's Portela Airport, and did numerous other public building projects. Maria Keil designed the wall coverings for the Lisbon subway over a period from 1957 to 1982. Covering nineteen stations with glazed painted tile or azulejo. This is a traditional Portuguese form of decorating wich youll find in many a church or governmental building, but which had fallen into disuse in the first half of the twentieth century. The best examples of her work youll find at the Intendente, Restauradores and Anjos.

Cathedral Sé

The cathedral of Lisbon dates back to the 12th century and was built by order of Alfonso Henriques, first king of Portugal, after having conquered the town to the Moors in 1147. Originally built in Romanic style, the Gothic and Baroque styles result of enlargements of the 14th and 17th centuries. The cathedral was affected by several earthquakes, mainly by the 1755 one, that also destroyed large parts of the city. The Sé, like the Lisbons name their cathedral, was restored in the 20th century, but still you see the devastations, especially in the Gothic cloister (entrance fee 1000 Esc.). The Naval Museum Museu de Marinha

The Naval Museum, founded by King Luís on June 22nd, 1863 is at present situated next to the Monastery of Jerónimos in Lisbon (Belem). It was housed for a time in the former Naval School and the Palace of the Count of Farrobo before making the symbolic transfer to Belém, for it was from Belém, not far from the chapel of Our Lady of Belém, that Vasco da Gama set sail for India, so when the museum was moved to this site an "old dream of the Navy" was fulfilled. Starting with some models of Portuguese Royal Navy vessels, items began to be collected for the Naval Museum during the 18th century. Today, over a century later, the collection has grown to over 16.000 items, not counting the photographic and other archives that contain plans and drawings of ships. There is an extensive collection of craft, as well as naval artillery and nautical instruments showing important events in the history of the Portuguese navy, not only in the golden age of Portuguese navigation, but also in the centuries which followed.

Lisbon – Getting Around

For pedestrians it is almost always worth while, unless you are having a day out of the city, to buy a ticket valid for the whole day. NB These are not 24 hour tickets but expire at 02.00 in the morning.

One of the best ways to get to know the city is by trying out some tramlines. Lisbon still has a few old cars running through its small streets as well as some new ones to Belem. They seem to belong to a lost era and are really popular amongst both tourists and locals. In particular, it is worth taking tram number 28 for its entire journey. A large bus system connects all main attractions, that are not reachable by trams. Using the subway is a lot faster, but the view is of course not that fascinating and the recent subway net does first of all lead to the suburbs: neither the airport nor the main train stations or Belem are connected with it. You should actually use the metro for the beautiful tile decorations in the stations by sights.

Elevadors

Getting from the level of the Barrio in Lisbon up to the Bairro Alto would either involve a very steep climb or a long zigzag route if it were not for the elevadors. There are four in total but two are worth taking for their own sake:

The Elevador de Santa Justa is a large outdoor lift from the end of a road to a level about half way up – very picturesque.

The Elevador de Gloria is a funicular up from near Rocio station to the Bairro Alto. To the right at the top is a view point across the lower city and up to the Castelo on the other side – superb when the sun is declining.

Ferries

Not only is it pleasant for visitors to use ferries for their own sake but, if you look at the traffic queues for the bridge in the rush period, you will realise that it's sometimes the quickest way!

Interestingly rail trips south start with a ferry crossing to the southern station!

Lisbon – Nightlife and Entertainment

At night, the city's old quarters come alive with the sound of fado singing and guitar-playing, the musical expression of the soul of Lisbon's inhabitants. And yet, down the hill at the open-air cafés, bars and discothèques, whose lights are reflected in the calm waters of the River Tagus, the night is still young. Why not also take advantage of Lisbon's special location and enjoy the white sand of the long ocean beaches, just a stone's throw from the Portuguese capital? Also to be found close by are a series of excellent golf courses, a casino, and the romantic town of Sintra, a paradise that has been magnificently set in the most beautiful landscape and has rightly been classified as world heritage. Nightlife is concentrated on the waterfront between the Docks and Avenida 24 de Julho, and in the Bairro Alto. For those wishing to see a show with more authentically Portuguese origins, the ideal choice is a Fado House in one of the city's typical neighborhoods.

Lisbon – Beaches

Like.... Uau... Lisboa has several nearby beaches, and you can find it very hard not to go for a swim on the hot summer days.

The fastest way to get there is to take the Linha do Estoril train at Cais do Sodré, there's a metro station over there.

You should ride the train until Carcavelos which is the first beach washed by the open sea. But, if you're in the mood to walk a bit you must go all the way to Cascais and stroll through the most amazing scenery culminating in Guincho (of course you can take a taxi or a bus there too).

Enjoy the sun and the unspoiled dunes and beaches!!

all

Guincho

Just 1 or 2 miles from Cascais. A little windy. Great sets. Amazing scenery.
sto amaro – Oeiras

A very long beach, nevertheless a bit crowded all through late spring, summer and early fall. Great sets. A lot of fun and girls. Good for too.

To go to this beach you must go by train. It's a beautiful journey but the beach is poluted... and not so good!

Costa da Caparica

The best beaches around Lisbon are in Costa da Caparica. You can go by bus 75 – only in summer – but you can take the boat at Belem going to Trafaria and then take the bus to the beach.

If you rent a car – cross the 25th April bridge...

url: lua.weblog.com.pt

Fonte da Telha

This is a excelent beach... but far! You can only go by car...
